A Winter Tale (continued)

There's a wooden sign over our kitchen door that reads:

"Remember What's Important"

No matter how many times I see it, I'm always grateful for the reminder.

The truth is I have an incredible family - funny, boisterous, and plenty tender on the inside. And just for the record, every one an avid reader! I wouldn't trade them for the world! Honest. For all messiness that comes with families, and just being alive and human, I can say without hesitation, this life is one giant blessing.

So, dear readers, from my family to yours, I wish you a peaceful, healthy, and abundantly joyful new year. And I invite you to join me in remembering what's most important ... the love of family and friends, good health, books, a good night kiss, laughter, summer book fairs, quiet moments, the sliver of a moon, following your dreams, people who sort books, a cup of tea, practicing kindness ...

~ Betsy Jackson can be found resting on her new massage table; a present from her husband! You may also spot her writing, teaching yoga, meandering around the library; all of the above. She loves to speak to people about the writing life, creativity, breathing ... Drop her a note at scratchingonpaper@verizon.net and let her know what's on your "important" list.
